Circle carries mixed message

I'm not certain we need CBC's Circle Of Fear on television tonight to tell us that gang violence is a problem in Canadian cities. But I'm not certain we don't need it

Circle carries with it a

Circle carries with it a very serious mixed message — that teenage gang violence has an effect on victims often overlooked — but that the same violence directed against the gang members by police is okay.

Airing tonight at 7:30 and carrying with it a stellar cast, Circle Of Fear in 30 minutes, sketches the story of Danny Cross (Fab Filippo), a high school student who becomes involved in the parking garage beating of a man who discovers a gang of teens breaking into gang of teens breaking into his car.

Cross is there because of Cross is there because of peer pressure — the girl he's trying to impress (DeGrassi's Staci Mistyshyn) hangs with a tough crowd, and he's sucked in like dustballs to a Hoover — and he gets caught.

Initially at least, writer-director Graeme Lynch does almost too good a job of setting the stage. Too good because the film, geared to teens, is so well cast and so realistically written, that the punk gang members really don't seem so threatening, the girls they travel with aren't that bad, and the hero (Filippo) is such a nice kid his behaviour the fullness of the story we quickly leave.

could almost be excused.

In the fullness of the story we quickly learn how bad the bad guys really are, especially Joel Wyner who meets a fitting end at the hands of a female police officer.

What's wrong with Circle? Just two things. First, surprisingly, it holds back too much. Sara (ENG) Botsford as the mother of a teenage beating victim is fine as she deals with her comatose son in the intensive care unit, but the boy's beating and injuries don't appear so severe as to alicit ber reactions.

the boy's beating and injuries don't appear so severe as to elicit her reactions.

I know it seems bizarre to suggest that a presentation may not be violent enough, and this is no criticism of filmmaker Lynch's abilities — given the show's timeslot and target audience, he has done a masterful job.

The other problem is length — the subject matter is really more suited to a hour-long program, not 30 minutes. There really isn't enough time to draw the characters as sharply as they deserve. And the outcome is too fast in developing.

Sharply as tiley deserve that developing.

These are picky comments though considering the gravity of Circles mandate. In a very responsible and highly innovative move, Lynch adds an epilogue that brings back the cast, all in character, to add a postscript to the film, one designed to defuse any thoughts in the minds of viewers that some of the behaviour portrayed is actually cool or desirable.

This is a very touchy issue and it's handled with skill and just a touch of danger. Circle Of Fear airs at 7:30 tonight on CBC Television.

RICK'S PICK:

Heroes are not always what they appear to be. That's what some of the people at Roslyn's find out tonight on Northern Exposure at 10 on Global.
